ISO 37001

The goal of the International Organization for Standardization is to promote the growth and development of manufacturing, trade, and communication among businesses worldwide. This 164-member global federation accomplishes these goals by developing voluntary management system standards that facilitate worldwide trade and the production of quality products and services, and encourage good business practices.

One of the newest entrants to the ISO family of standards is ISO 37001. ISO 37001 promotes effective business practices intended to detect, prevent, and respond to incidents of bribery. Registration to ISO 37001 provides objective proof that an organization takes business ethics seriously and works to promote an honest, trustworthy culture.
